

Health Information Inequality BRIDGE-ing the gap through shared experiences and knowledge

Jennifer Zeitlin, Inserm U1153, Paris

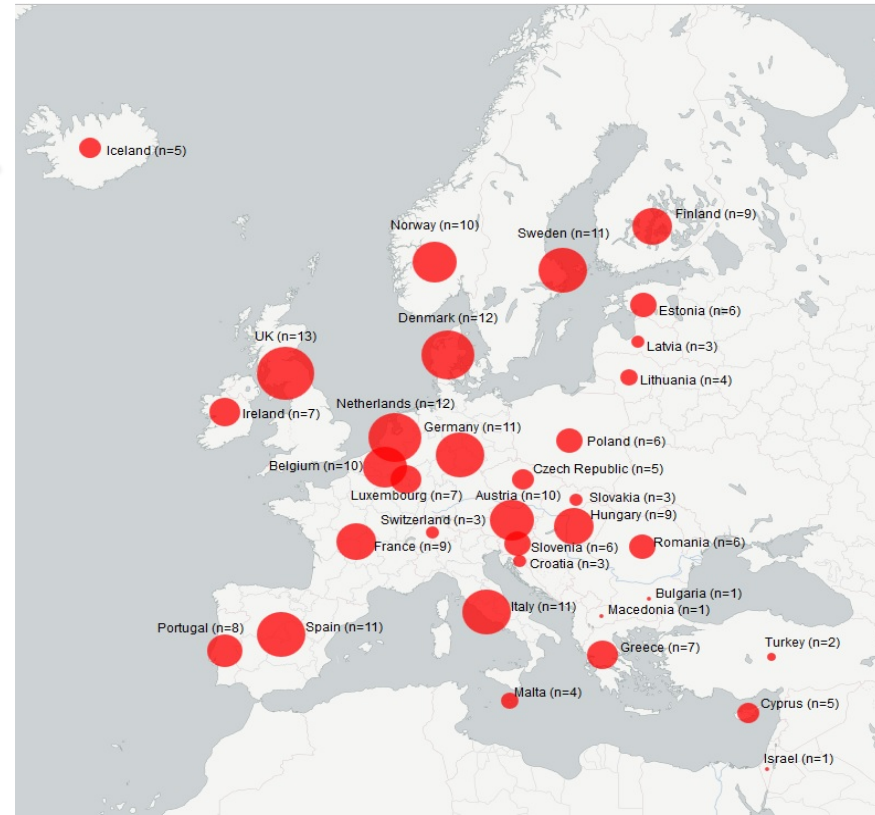

Health information inequality

Unequal capacity to monitor and evaluate health

Not in EU projects

Country data not used

Country data not collected

Facilitators: re

“Countries with a clear commitment to public accountability and evaluation for improvement are better equipped”

“Successfully addressing privacy and consent issues promotes health information initiatives”

Political and policy priorities

Ethics

“High performing systems are those where researchers study and report on population health and health system performance”

“There are large difficulties communicating between different administrations that are responsible for health information and policy.”

Knowledge

Infrastructure, governance and communication

Principal question

Building a European HI system will require improvement of data availability and quality on a national level, so:

- How can we convince governments to invest in health information infrastructure?
